

GEORGE W. MATTHEWS HOUSE

13 PARK AVENUE

13 Park Avenue is a two sectioned house which still has a rectangular floor plan, reflecting two distinct periods of construction. The house faces the east side of Belle Grove Square across Park Avenue in Westminster.

Each of the house's two sections is about the same dimension; the thought-to-be original section is a five course common bond brick pile two stories tall, two bays deep, and two bays wide. Only the northern and southern facades are exposed, as asbestos shingled additions go to the east and west. These bays are irregularly placed double-hung sash windows with two over two panes; windows are simply enframed but have 3 coursed gauged flat arches. Modern intrusions on the south facade include small square casement windows, doubtless lighting a kitchen or bath.

13 Park Avenue is a two sectioned house which still has a rectangular floor plan, reflecting two distinct periods of construction. The house faces the east side of Belle Grove Square across Park Avenue in Westminster.

Each of the house's two sections is about the same dimension; the thought-to-be original section is a five course common bond brick pile two stories tall, two bays deep, and two bays wide. Only the northern and southern facades are exposed, as asbestos shingled additions go to the east and west. These bays are irregularly placed double-hung sash windows, with two over two panes; windows are simply enframed but have 3 coursed gauged flat arches. Modern intrusions on the south facade include small square casement windows, doubtless lighting a kitchen or bath.

The principal addition, equal in size, to the original brick building, is covered in asbestos shingles of about the same light tan color as the older brick building. This section is blind to the north and south, but is quite busy on its principal (west) facade which fronts the park. There are two 1/1 windows regularly spaced on the second floor above the shed roof porch. The porch is filled-in for about a third of the distance to the south (where a 1/1 window looks out to the south), has a pair of 1/1 windows in the center, and a glass and enriched panel door to the north. There is an oddly placed central Victorian peak in the center of the porch, centered over one of the supporting posts. This pediment shape is echoed first in the gable end of the roof which faces the street (a great rarity in the City), and in the small gable which covers the triplet set of stain glass and small paned attic windows, which are placed in the center of the gable. This attic group is covered by thin dentiled cornice and is flanked by scroll brackets. The east front of the original brick section is also altered by a shingled two story pile of a very narrow depth. The addition is blind to the north and south but has a two story shed roofed porch running across its east front. There is a glass and panelled door to the south approached by a single flight of wooden steps which rise from the east. Chimneys include a corbel-capped chimney where the main asbestos shingle meets the brick original section and a very broad corbel capped chimney where the brick section meets the thin eastern addition. Placement of these chimneys makes one suspect that the house, the original house meaning the brick section, probably faced to the north or the south, not to the east or west as it does now. There is a house of about this shape located somewhat back on lot 27 of Matthew's Addition, which is this lot.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Number 13 Park Avenue is significant in the history of Westminster for its architecture, and for its possible early owner. The building, with its two distinct sections, reflects, not surprisingly, two distinct eras. The older section (the brick rear half is simple in design and layout, and probably antedates the other houses on Belle Grove Square). It, and the other houses, were part of the $3000 transaction when John Brooke Boyle sold an acre and a half of land belonging to Jacob Mathias to George Matthews on July 24, 1866 (Carroll County Deed Book 33, Page 409). Matthews probably then built the brick house for himself and his wife, as it clearly is shown on the 1876 plat of the City and Matthews is listed as living here in the 1881 City Directory. If this is so, then it is interesting to see that the house of the man who laid out this section of town was very small, one of the smallest, in fact, of the houses that front the Square. Later someone, or perhaps he himself, doubled the house in size, although it still is not large, adding the front clapboard half. This half with its carved bargeboard and the eaves' treatment and stained glass, is a fine representative of the buildings of the late-Victorian Edwardian eras.

Matthews and wife kept title for 30 years until they sold the lot (no. 37) measuring 51' x 151' to Oscar Gilbert for $1405 on March 31, 1896, (82/218). It may well have been Gilbert who built the clapboard section. Gilbert sold the lot to Virginia Saylor, widow, on March 28, 1923 (141/432). She and her heirs sold the place to Jay William Eckenrode, present owner, on October 12, 1940 (173/561). The lot was divided on May 18, 1966, between Thomas E. Riggen and Eckenrode.
